Introduction

In the German Federal Republic today, two-thirds of the population read the weekly horoscopes published in newspapers and magazines; each of these nearly forty million people knows the sign of the zodiac occupied by the Sun at the time of his birth. As demographic surveys have shown, great interest in astrology is very much prevalent in America and England. Although this obvious interest cannot be considered equivalent to earnest astrological studies, it does lead to the conclusion that a significant number of people are concerned with their character and personality and with the eventualities of fate.

Nowadays, when the cue word "astrology" is given in discussion and conversation, three reaction categories can be distinguished: The first category includes those professing complete belief in astrological interpretations; the second those rejecting on principle everything connected with astrology as superstitious nonsense; to the third category belong those who are skeptical, but who feel astrology cannot be all wrong and that there is reason for taking it seriously.

A Look at History

The word astrology designates a field of knowledge more than ten thousand years old and whose object of study is the possible influence of the stars on the Earth, on natural phenomena, political events and, above all, on human disposition, character and fate.

Let us go back in time to when the foundations of astrology were first established and place ourselves in the position of early man, who saw himself completely at the mercy of the elements: He had to learn the seasons for gathering and hunting, and to keep from starving, he had to take care to have enough food for the times when there was little or no nourishment to be found. As a matter of course he discovered he had to subject himself to a cosmic rhythm, the changing seasons, in order to survive.

When the Sun set, it became cold and dark, and the day's activity came to a compulsory end. Man's existence was dependent upon his being active during the day and taking his rest at night.

Early man also was aware of his vital need of the Sun. It is then no wonder that he began to mark the course of the Sun in order to come to rights with the important phases of life. Observation and experience showed that the Sun did not rise and set at the same place every day. This is testified, for example, by the ancient circle of stones discovered in Scotland. In this circle, the four cardinal points are marked by blocks of stones.

In another stone circle located in northeast Scotland are contained six stone blocks indicating not only north, south, east and west, but also south-southeast and north-northwest, i.e., the winter and summer solstitial points.

Similar and even more refined evidence of early man's orienting ability can also be found in Norway, Germany, on numerous islands in the Pacific and elsewhere.

Other markings were made by cutting circles and sections of circles in stone, on trees or wooden discs. In his book, Die heilige Urschrift der Menschheit (1), (The Sacred Writing of Early Man), Herman Wirth presents numerous examples of such early records, which go as far back as the Stone Age (6-18,000 years ago). The remarkable thing is that these aids of orientation are dispersed throughout the entire world, meaning that a comprehension of the solar year, still the basis of our time-reckoning, was common knowledge to ancient mankind.

In addition to the Sun, the Moon and visible planets were also of great significance to early man. Religious conceptions, myths and legends give telling evidence of this in all parts of the world.

Man's existence has always been threatened and plagued by war, and a certain role was played here by the planet Mars. Mars in perigee shone most brightly in a reddish light. Early man knew from experience that a period of a red-tinted Mars in perigee frequently meant great tribal unrest and animosity, and the danger of war was imminent.

Outstanding achievements of ancient man were the grouping of the myriad stars appearing in the firmament into the signs of the zodiac and the exact measurement of the solar, lunar and planetary motion within the zodiac. The oldest representation of the zodiac known is located at the temple at Dendera in Egypt and dates approximately from the period of the conquest of Egypt by Alexander the Great (332 B.C.).

On the Way to the Individual Natal Chart

The interpretation of cosmic constellations for the individual can be traced back to Babylonian and Assyrian times; however, prophecies were only made in reference to the king, and any inferences made from the destiny of the king as read in the constellations would then be rendered applicable to the king's subjects and realm as a whole.

To illustrate, one simple example from a deciphered cuneiform text: "When Moon and Sun are in opposition on the 14th lunar day, the king of the realm will be possessed of an extensive ear."

Another example: "When the Moon is darkened on the 14th of Sivan (May/June), and the fourth wind (the East wind) blows, enmity will reign, and there will be dying."

One other prophecy: "When the New Moon wears a white crown, the King will gain supremacy over other nations" (2).

In the Middle Ages a horoscope was no longer cast solely for the monarch, but also for other significant personages, such as bishops, popes, ministers and wealthy merchants. However, the road leading to today's natal chart (horoscope, cosmogram) was still long.

Collective Destinies

Anyone who has undertaken the task of going back many centuries in time to discover which events have occurred under certain planetary configurations will not cease to be astounded. Of particular interest is a study of Uranus-Pluto constellations of the past 350 years, published by Reinhold Ebertin in the Kosmobiologisches Jahrbuch 1962 (3). Approximately three years prior to the exact due date of Uranus-Pluto constellations, important revolutions would flare up, which, at the exact due date, would have as a consequence the signing of treaties and appeasement (e.g. 1597/98, 1648, 1709/10, 1792/93, 1852, 1901, 1964/65). There is evidence of other significant events involving great numbers of people taking place under very striking planetary configurations.

Planets and Chemical Compounds

Circa 1920, L. Kolisko, at the former Institute of Biology at the Goetheanum, Stuttgart, began his research into the effects of very slight quantities of elements, minerals and drugs (silver, gold, mercury, calcium, etc.) on plant life and growth. These initial experiments were soon followed by others to bring proof of the effect of solar and lunar eclipses as well as of certain planetary configurations on plant life and certain chemical compounds (4). Similar experiments were carried on by the pharmaceutical companies (anthroposophically oriented) Welda in Schwäbisch Hall and Wala Eckwälden near Göppingen (5).

In the journal Kosmobiologie, the engineer Hermann Jaeger (6) has reported on the large-scale experimentation he did with plant seeds and shoots. He was able to prove that the sowing of seeds at certain times and under certain planetary configurations had a positive or negative effect on the growth, size and strength of the plants.

Professor Jakob Eugster (7), together with his pupils, exposed plant seeds, ferments and human skin to the stratospheric cosmic rays. For instance, barley seeds were exposed to cosmic rays at an altitude of more than 30,000 meters for 65 hours, sealed off from light and covered with special photographic plates. Pertinent are the following results:

- 1) Retarded germination in contrast to the control seeds on Earth.
- 2) Striking differences in quality, depending on the altitude at which the seeds underwent exposure.
- 3) Those seeds exposed to a maximum of cosmic rays were stunted in growth.
- 4) It can be assumed that the seeds undergoing maximum exposure have suffered germ damage, as in mutation.

Further experiments were made using animal specimens, e.g., the eggs of the salt crab. The exposure of these eggs, under constant temperature and at an altitude of 15-20,000 meters, to cosmic rays brought the following results:

- 1) The hatching rate of the eggs was greatly reduced under the influence of the cosmic rays.
- 2) The hatching rate diminishes in inverse ratio to the absolute altitude of exposure. Thus the number of damaged eggs increases with altitude.
- 3) The observations made so far give support to the supposition that almost all eggs survive the exposure to the cosmic rays, but the eggs under maximum exposure show chromosome abnormalities and, presumably, chromosome fractions.

Tests under the Earth in conditions of practical non-radiation have demonstrated that life on the Earth's surface has accommodated itself to a certain degree of environmental radiation. As soon as a state of constant under-dosis of radiation is reached, living organisms are so strongly affected that the multiplication of cells stops. It is therefore obvious that, depending on its intensity, cosmic radiation can be attributed with effects either detrimental to life or furthering it.

An Aid to Medicine

American physician Dr. E. Andrews is the author of an article entitled "Moon Talk—The Cyclic Periodicity of Postoperative Hemorrhage" (8). Dr. Andrews has observed that at certain times there is a greater than usual tendency toward excessive bleeding. He and other specialists have found that "there are days in the operating room when hemorrhage is of no import; at other times, persistent and annoying bleeding is the rule of the day."

One nurse pointed out to Dr. Andrew that the Moon could be the influencing factor, which he found to be absurd: "But unbeknown to me, she had kept a record of my bleeders on a calendar and proceeded to show me, much to my amazement, that their bleeding was, indeed, coincident, with the Full Moon. In fact, these bleeders were so definitely grouped according to the lunar cycle that we decided to collect some additional data in a more scientific and complete manner rather than merely to circle a date on the calendar." In the ensuing time, Dr. Andrew checked more than one thousand cases of tonsil bleeders from the years 1956 to 1958. The statistics showed that 82 percent of the cases compiled occurred in the interval between the first quarter and one day before the third quarter of the Moon phase, i.e., 82 percent of the hemorrhages centered at Full Moon. Other physicians, for example Dr. Carl S. McLemore of Orlando, obtained the same results (9). Dr. Andrew went one step further. He undertook a check of peptic ulcer bleeding for the same period as above, the years 1956 to 1958. Again, a preponderance of bleeding at the time of Full Moon was evident.

Two other American physicians, Dr. Abraham and Dr. Walther Menaker, did a study on lunar periodicity in human reproduction. They found that "Full Moon days averaged 7 percent more births than New Moon days" (10).

Cosmic Constellations and Heredity

Johannes Kepler (11), born January 6, 1572 (according to our calendar), mentioned in his works and letters that related persons had similar constellations in their natal charts. Carl Brentano, M.D. (12), who spoke on this topic at the first Work Congress for Cosmobiological Research in 1949, based his thesis primarily on the research of Frenchman Choisnard and German physician Dr. Baron von Klöckler. Brentano asserted that the strongest link of astrology to the natural sciences lay in proving that the astronomical positions are hereditary, a problem to be solved purely mathematically. Those who therefore undertake to refute the results of cosmobiological research without first having considered the results of cosmobiological research into heredity, will be laying themselves open to justified accusations of ignorance or of not being scientific. Georg Lomer, M.D. (13) also has done considerable research into the heredity of cosmic constellations, the results of which have in part been published in the journals of the Ebertin-Verlag. Reinhold Ebertin set up a test form (EKT) to aid in determining the coincidence of hereditary factors. In this connection, attention also should be paid to the example in the appendix, the "family with sick blood." Here it is obviously possible to prove heredity down to the very last element on the basis of the half-sum constellations.

The most comprehensive research has been carried out by Dr. Michel Gauquelin, Paris (14). At the 22nd Work Congress for Cosmobiological Research 1970 in Aalen, he reported that he had made a check of more than 30, 000 births and could prove there is a hereditary predisposition in which children are born under the same cosmic conditions as those of their parents.

Similar Stellar Positions in Reference to Vocational Groups

The old rules of 2,000 years ago can today no longer hold true in full because times really have changed. A characteristic example for the occurrence of the same or similar stellar combinations in reference to vocational groups is furnished by the hereditary constellations of the Hoffmann family, which in previous centuries had taken on the duty of executioner, seeing to it that convicted criminals were transported from this life to the next. As the necessity for executing the death sentence diminished, the family primarily produced physicians and surgeons. This is just the same as when a butcher family, achieving a higher standard of living, turns out surgeons or engineers. All of these professions came earlier under the influence of Mars.

Dr. Michel Gauquelin had, prior to his occupation with the heredity of cosmic positions, already worked out statistics which he had originally intended to use in his refutation of astrology. He drew up a graphic circle, divided into 12 or 18 sectors and ascertained which sectors were occupied by which planets and which planets were located on the Ascendant-Descendant and Medium Coeli-Immun Coeli axes.

It was shown that actors, for instance, had Jupiter in the vicinity of Midheaven; in the case of well-known congressmen, Jupiter is to be found at the Ascendant; and with scientists, Saturn is near the point of culmination.

Dr. Baldur Ebertin (15) discovered that one should not concentrate solely on the planet for studying professions, dispositions, illness, etc. Instead, whole groups of constellations have to be collated, the majority of which will apply in the individual case. His designation for these constellation groups is derived from the psychological concept syndrome.

P. Agoston Terres (16), who has been especially active in the casting of cosmo-psychograms according to the system of the "two Ebertins" (father and son), has succeeded in defining such syndromes for several vocational groups. This method of working has served as a model for other researchers as well, such as Dr. Tibor von Toth (17). The journals Kosmobiologie and Cosmobiology International bring running reports on the progress made in this sphere.

And Psychotherapy?

In casting the cosmograms (horoscopes, natal charts) of patients and examining past and future configurations for these individuals, it has frequently been the case that patients come to consultation after a prolonged phase of Neptune constellations and that a definite turn in the psychotherapeutic treatment becomes manifest under Uranus or Pluto constellations. Indeed, the consideration of the planetary constellations can be vital to the treatment and observation of patients with suicidal tendencies (18).

General Social Welfare

When difficulties are encountered in the upbringing of children and adolescents, or when someone needs help in coming to rights with his life and way of living, the individual's natal chart, together with prognosticatory devices such as the so-called transits, solar arc directions and progressions, can provide this vital aid. There is not enough space available here to follow this line of thought further; please consult the corresponding literature: (19), (20), (21), (22), (23).

What is Cosmobiology?

Cosmobiology is a scientific discipline concerned with the possible correlation between cosmos and organic life and the effects of cosmic rhythms and stellar motion on man, with all his potentials and dispositions, his character and the possible turns of fate. It also researches these correlations and effects as mirrored by the earth's plant and animal life as a whole. In this endeavor cosmobiology utilizes modern-day methods of scientific research, such as statistics, analysis and computer programming. It is of prime importance, however, in view of the scientific effort expended, not to overlook the macrocosmic and microcosmic interrelations incapable of measurement. The word cosmobiology was coined by the Austrian physician Dr. Feerhow and later was used by the Swiss statistician K. E. Krafft to designate that branch of astrology working on scientific foundations and keyed to the natural sciences. Cosmobiology has, through the work of the author of this book, become increasingly well-known within the last forty years for those aspects marking it off from ancient astrology. Despite the great diagnostic value of cosmobiology in the fields of characterology and psychology, one should not forget that the individual's natal constellation can only be seen and properly interpreted in connection with his life history (medical history, parental home, brothers and sisters, milieu, upbringing, the time and circumstances in which he lives, religion, manners and morals, environment, etc.). Those who are concerned with counseling and want to give genuine aid to those seeking advice will on the one hand find themselves unable to dispense with the cosmobiological and cosmopsychological diagnostic once they have become acquainted with its methods; on the other hand, they will find that well-grounded psychological and medical knowledge is essential for the correct evaluation and interpretation of the relevancy of all the individual factors contained in a natal chart.

Self-knowledge Through Cosmobiology

The interpretations of certain planetary constellations presented in this book are intended to provide an insight into the disposition, capabilities, aspects of character and possibilities of fate of the individual. In this respect, they aid in the analysis of the human being in psychological, medical and sociological terms. The reader is shown how he can combine the various elements of his natal chart to form a meaningful picture of himself. This entails the correlation of the experience inherent in tradition with new methods of research. This procedure represents the attempt to form a link between mythic and symbolic thought and the natural sciences and, therefore, to synthesize ancient astrological tradition and modern psychological conceptions.

In ancient cultures, myths, religions and legends, the Sun, for example, was regarded as the symbol of life. In the natal chart, conclusions are made as to the strength and kind of the individual's vitality from the position of the Sun in the zodiac and its aspects to other stellar bodies. In addition, the Sun represents the male principle in the natal chart, the Moon represents the female principle, and consciousness or unconsciousness also are attributed to these two stellar bodies.

In contrast to tradition, which more or less wants to give interpretations of destiny, it is my endeavor to interpret destiny from the somatopsychical disposition or makeup of a person. Dr. Baron von Klöckler shares my view, and it is to his credit that he has critically investigated and freed astrology from occultism. He writes as follows:

“Modern Man raises the utmost objections against a conditioning of destiny which one does not assume today to be clear cut and conditioned causally. On the other hand this could be feasible up to a point after all if one would consider those experiences only which are controlled by Man’s psychophysical condition. Anybody who has even only thought a little about the inner relationships cannot deny that character rather than ability represents a first rate power of destiny. One must not blame the astrologers if they try to unravel the threads which connect destiny with character. This tendency is eminently scientific. . . . The astronomical suppositions of possible facts concerning the physical and emotional state of Man appear to me much more securely established than all the others; the destinies which can be deduced from such relationships seem therefore expressed in the clearest way” (24).

The interpretation of the birth chart itself, and of life events as well, becomes easier and more comprehensible if one starts with the realization that every action is born from a definite emotional make-up and inversely that every event causes an emotional reaction.

Thus it is not important to point out definite events in a person’s destiny—which would lead to incorrect prognostications as there are always influences prevailing which we cannot determine—but that owing to definite astronomical configurations the particular state of a person’s soul can be perceived or discerned, e.g., if we have to consider the conjunction of Saturn passing by transit over the natal Moon, some traditional rules indicate “illness” whereas others may point to the “death of the mother or the wife” or to “difficult circumstances in home life,” etc. But in any case we have here to deal with an emotional (Moon) depression (Saturn) or an emotional inhibition or a sad mood. Such an emotional state can be diagnosed with some measure of certainty, but not such events as illness, death etc.

Here it is important to consider that each constellation in a cosmogram can, on the one hand, only be meaningfully interpreted in connection with other constellations (25); on the other hand, knowledge of the age, sex, present life circumstances, upbringing, etc., is essential in order to form a correct picture and thus to give proper advice and help.

For this reason it is necessary to correlate the elements of interpretation arising from various configurations with one another just like a set of various scientific formulae interconnected with one another.

With certain reservations the astrological correspondence may be likened to the qualitative descriptions of the various elements in chemistry (hardness, valency, rate or potential of efficiency and emergency, etc.). Nevertheless, organic or emotional states cannot be expressed in such exact mathematical formulae as are used in chemistry. Such a formulation would mean that biology and psychology had already succeeded in expressing organic and emotional processes through exact formulae (26).

Yet it has been attempted in this book to give such formulations, and experience has shown that they are in agreement with the facts found exactly or at least with the meaning implied according to the context, providing they are used correctly. This result was achieved by harmonizing the mythic-symbolic and primeval elements with the principles of modern biology and psychology.

Although Klöckler (27) has already pointed out the stellar relationships to the biological, organic, psychological and sociological elements in a clearly understood fashion, these classifications have been arranged in a new form as regards the stellar relationships or aspects.

The term "aspect" means the angular distance between two stars or, as Kepler expresses it, "An aspect is a geometrical combination of two planetary light rays converging here on Earth, as it were." The inner nature of the aspects has been clearly demonstrated by Dr. Walter Koch (28) in Doctrine of Aspects. Koch gives the following explanation in his book: "Whatever angles two planets may form elsewhere in the Universe is of no concern as regards the geocentric viewpoint of the horoscope, inversely, an aspect thrown upon the earth has no effect upon the planets themselves. The aspect angles are only real when viewed from the Earth; they stand in relationship to Man who views them. They are of equal size on all places of the Earth. The distance of the planets which form the aspect angle is unimportant. An aspect becomes effective or potent when it is exact, thus fitting in with the geometrical pattern-ideal and expressing the state of harmony in proportion, which symbolizes the aspect in its numerical definition as well." One distinguishes the following main aspects: conjunction (0°), semisquare or octile (45°), sextile (60°), square (90°), sesquiquadrate or trioctile (135°) and opposition (180°).

Whereas one can read more or less prescriptive rules, often long-winded, as regards every single aspect in the more old fashioned astrological textbooks on interpretation, the various elements of interpretation concerning the stellar bodies have been combined with one another in this work. Thus a combination of Sun and Moon means: "Spirit and Soul, conscious and unconscious influences, vital power and feeling, Man and Woman." The following psychological correspondence can be derived from the foregoing definitions in a positive sense: (+) harmonious character, inner balance, and in a negative sense; (-) inner discontentment, unbalanced behavior, etc.

The signifying symbols + and - have been chosen purposely in order to avoid the terms "favorable" and "unfavorable," the use of which is becoming more and more obsolete in modern astrology. Hitherto, squares and oppositions have been termed unfavorable and sextiles and trines favorable. However, experience has shown that such a usage is not always correct.

I have attempted repeatedly to explain the difference in such a way that sextiles and trines signify a state of things, whereas squares and oppositions signify an action or an event. Koch says quite rightly that in modern scientific astrology all aspects must be considered equal but only that their potency or effect may be stronger or weaker as the case may be. He prefers a division into "soft" (sextile, trine) and "hard" (square, opposition) aspects.

Now many a reader may ask the question under what circumstances are we to use the positive interpretation and under what circumstances the negative interpretation. Such a valuation depends on the integral examination and judgment of the complete natal chart, in the absence of which it is impossible to establish a mode of procedure. There is also very little information on this subject in the available astrological literature that can be utilized.

The cosmobiologist has two possibilities available to him for making an appropriate evaluation: He must study, within the framework of the natal chart, the "cosmic state" of the stellar body in question, meaning, among other things, its aspects to other elements of the natal chart and, above all, to the so-called half-sums and constellations. In addition, he must perceive at which developmental stage the individual is at present and what situations could mean conflict. This kind of immediate picture can be made of the individual not only from conversation, but also from his handwriting, life history, behavior or from psychological tests. It is a basic fact, however, that positive and negative interpretations can develop simultaneously for any particular planetary configuration. Practical examples of positive and negative evaluations of the aspects, half-sums and their interrelations are contained in my books, some of which are also available in English (29) (30).

Let us take the opposition of Venus and Jupiter in Goethe's horoscope as an example and ask how we are to judge this opposition. Later in this book the following keywords are given: "Joy of love, happiness in love."

For the psychological correspondence the following terms are given:

- + Warm-hearted disposition, grace, tact, attractive manner, making oneself popular with others, harmonious relationship to other persons, a very keen appreciation of form.
- A tendency for ease, comfort or convenience, negligence, improper conduct in love-relationship, self-conceit, wastefulness, an over-stressed emotional life.

Here we also find various confirmations. With regard to his improper behavior in matters of love and affection we need only cite his relationship to Friederike von Sesenheim, from which Goethe had suffered for a long time. We are therefore forced to the conclusion that both positive and negative indications meet the case to a certain extent. Perhaps there are other factors coming up for consideration which cannot be deduced from the natal chart, such as parents and home, upbringing and education, profession, vocation and position and so forth.

Venus in Virgo often indicates a striving for moral purity (see "Cosmic Psychology"). Jupiter in Pisces indicates a tendency toward altruism, understanding of one's fellowmen and an appreciation of beauty, harmony and art. And if one furthermore considers the trine of Neptune in Cancer to Jupiter, the sextile to Venus and also other stellar combinations which cannot be enumerated here, it follows that the opposition between Venus and Jupiter will be expressed positively rather than negatively. The later explanations will prove that the picture of character and the trend of destiny will gain in clarity and permit one interpretation only if we correlate and combine several elements of interpretation together.

As far as has seemed necessary, the interpretations for the conjunction (C) have been given separately. The biological and organic correspondences of the stellar and planetary pairs have, to the author's knowledge, not yet been rendered anywhere in full for this work. The collaboration of a qualified physician was indispensable. I am especially indebted to H. G. Muller-Freywardt, M.D., who has revised my manuscript in providing valuable supplementary information. The following are his own introductory remarks:

Cosmobiological Correspondences of the Human Body

The physician's use of the horoscope does not represent a self-contained aspect of medical practice. As experience has taught us, it is impossible to base the diagnosis and treatment of illness solely on the patient's natal chart. To those knowledgeable in cosmobiology, this may seem surprising, especially when we consider that at the very moment of an individual's first breath all manner of developments and events filling a lifetime have been laid down. The idea of the individual in metaphysical captivity is no doubt a very important working hypothesis of all cosmobiologists. Within the scope of the research results obtained so far, only limited definitions can be made of the experiences and events imposed on an individual by a particular constellation. Therefore, in psychological, and especially in medical consultations, the conscientious and responsible therapist can by all means adhere to the theory of individual determinism. It enables one to survey in one natal chart the whole multiplicity of developmental possibilities contained in the individual symbols. In addition, the great danger can be avoided of infecting the individual seeking advice, or the sick person, with preconceptions about his cosmogram and of making a possible, i.e., latent, development absolutely inevitable by some anticipatory declaration. Accordingly, it cannot be termed a special merit or clear proof of cosmo-biological knowledge and skill when the prediction of a serious illness actually does come about exactly on time and at the expected place, especially when the patient has been informed beforehand of the anticipated development in all detail. The object of cosmically oriented medicine can only be to face, alleviate and, in some cases, prevent such eventualities.

The assertion that all events in a life are contained in the cosmogram is in all respects true. They are mirrored in the individual symbols and their interrelations. What has been and what is the past and the present—can be accurately related to the interpretative elements at hand; in this lies the value of the patient's cosmogram as aid to diagnosis and treatment. One can read which groups of symbols, which constellations, have become acute at a particular time and which trend is just becoming manifest within the framework of the individual determination.

One incontestable prerequisite for the intelligent and beneficial application of the cosmogram in the treatment of illness is the patient's anamnesis. As a rule, this will be colored by mental reservations, frequently by oppressive emotions, pangs of conscience, anxieties or aggressions. And here the patient's cosmogram serves as an objective gauge. Innumerable forgotten or repressed motives or causes giving rise to life crises can in this way be revealed; and no other method can achieve this more quickly or accurately.

This is an obvious and invaluable advantage for the psychotherapist, who frequently finds himself working on an analysis for weeks on end, or for the homeopath, who is dependent on certain modalities in the selection of medicaments, or for the hospital physician, who must make his choice of medicines as based on the causes of the illness. The art of approaching the patient from the viewpoint of the cosmogram is not practiced enough—and too often the opposite, i.e., telling the patient flatly to his face what's wrong with him. And in this respect, at least, many cosmobiologists can be likened to the physicians.

The actual aim of astro-medicine is more far-reaching. It endeavors to find the way out of a crisis and, where the patient himself has to decide, on the basis of the individual groups of symbols present. This process often involves the changing of habits, little eccentricities, as well as deep-seated faults. Here we can take for example one of the great evils of Central European civilization: obesity. Curbing of appetite, rules and restrictions lead practically nowhere in the treatment of this ailment, which brings on death relatively early. The natal chart of the obese patient indicates surely and quickly the motives for overeating.

A further purpose of astro-medicine is the conception of an individual prescription using the cosmogram. The traditional correlation of vegetables, animals and minerals to the planets and signs of the zodiac provides the basis for surprisingly effective and individual prescriptions, a method which does not need to draw on the spectacular advertising practices of modern pharmacy.

Finally, the responsible and conscientious physician will endeavor to delve into the significance of an illness in the life of an individual.

The significance of an illness can be regarded from various standpoints. In the biochemical sense, every deviation in the bodily processes from the general standard, which we call health, represents a kind of self-healing attempt. Reactions to disorders caused by internal or external harmful influences or poisons lead to counterreactions involving a variety of symptoms and which are supposed to restore the body to its original good balance. In order to understand such defense mechanisms, the body must be supported in its attempts at self-healing. Under circumstances, this can mean an intensification of certain symptoms, i.e., an initial stage of aggravation. In most cases this kind of parallel or homeopathic procedure meets with success. The symbol for the body and its building blocks, the cells, in the cosmogram is the Sun.

Practice has shown that there are three half-sums of primary interest in the investigation of a cosmogram to ascertain possible biological life crises:

- Mars/Neptune: expressive of illnesses caused by external harmful influences or poisons: infections, poisoning, misreactions, also deposits, embolisms, thromboses, etc.
- Saturn/Neptune: expressive of chronic illnesses, organic disorders, autogenous poisoning, and of functional defects which lead to scarring and seldom permit the restoration of the stricken area to its original state.
- Sun/Neptune: expressive of the weakened constitution.

The significance of a geocentric period increases in direct ratio with the number of personal points involved. Mars/Neptune = Mercury, which can be indicative of an infection within the nervous system, is only then of indicative value in the cosmogram when, for example, the mean between Sun and Meridian occupies the same degrees of the zodiac.

In addition to the Sun, the Dragon's Head also belongs to the ego personal points, which by no means should be neglected in the astro-medical interpretation of a natal chart. The appearance of the Dragon's Head in a "pathological" constellation indicates illnesses which are inborn in a family, i.e., hereditary, and also disorders in which the autonomic nervous system (sympathetic and vagus nerves) are concerned. The Dragon's Head symbolizes that force which Man in the evolutionary sense has in common with the plant world. This astral body, as it is called, plays only a very insignificant role in present day medicine, but can be said to be on a par with that area of research in which molecular biology is making its advances. Contained in the astral body are those manifold regulatory mechanisms which control man's constant accommodation to his environment: temperature, air pressure, humidity, the ontogenetic clock, perception and modulation of electromagnetic waves, and the adjustment to the changing stability produced by the acceleration and deceleration of our planet in its course around the Sun.

The third personal point is the Moon. Its participation in "pathological" half-sums indicates attendant or causative changes in the mental and emotional state and often signifies a disturbed dream life which encroaches on the consciousness of everyday life.

Finally, the Midheaven corresponds to awareness, ego-consciousness.

In accordance, prolonged geocentric periods can be found in cases of hereditary disease; Dragon's Head/Neptune is present in these periods as a main element.

Pathologically abnormal emotional and mental disturbances are indicated by Moon/Neptune: lack of motive power, "emotional numbness," extreme dependency on others, mental and emotional confusion, etc. Beyond this, we must also take into consideration that the basic formula for morbid emotionalism (hysteria) is Moon/Jupiter; for abnormal sensibility (neurosis) it is Moon/Saturn; and for the tendency to sudden extreme emotional outbreaks it is Moon/Uranus.

The position of the Moon in a geocentric period indicative of illness can give a clue as to the patient's attitude toward his ailment; that is, how he feels about it and how he unconsciously estimates it.

A special kind of problem is presented by the interpretation and significance of the Midheaven in the natal chart. Twenty years experience in astro-medicine has demonstrated to me that there is nothing more unreliable than the patient's own information on his time of birth. Through intensive questioning and through procuring more information from relations and from church records, rectifications of up to four days have often proved to be necessary. Generally, a meridian as calculated on the basis of the birth time is correct, plus or minus 30 degrees, in approximately eighty percent of the cases. But what other way is there to rectify the natal chart than by means of a precise anamnesis? A rectification can only then be considered reliable when, the accidents of birth having been accomplished, the Midheaven or Ascendant are present in the typical, potential relationships to the parental Sun and Dragon's Head positions.

The rectified meridian shows what the patient thinks of himself and how he is "allied" to his good sense. Here, too, a wide margin of variation is possible, and the formula, Meridian = Mars/Neptune, can signify a cold, but also this grave statement: I want to poison myself.

Differentiations can only be made in regard to the configuration as a whole. Planets and planetary configurations apply to system diagnosis; the personal points allude to the philogenetic structuring (body—astral body—soul—ego—consciousness), the planets to the cell and functional elements in question.

This interpretive structure is in conformity with the Platonic and Aristotelian conception of the "four bodies" in Man.

The diagnosis of illness based on the planetary positions in the houses of classic astrology is omitted from the method applied here. This is not meant to represent any criticism of the various systems of houses. The Combination of Stellar Influences also omits the linking up of certain bodily regions with the signs of the zodiac. The reason for this lies in the tendency to delete, as far as possible, any speculative factors. To deduce a disease of a particular bodily region by reason of a planet's position in some sign of the zodiac means working with factors of dubious character. Diagnoses made by the process of elimination are only complicated by the numerous categorizations of organs, so that the attempt was even once made to find anatomic correspondences for each of the zodiacal degrees. We can only presume that in the course of centuries extensive knowledge of the interaction of principles of energy in days of sickness and health has gradually been lost, because, for one, modern medical nomenclature has no reference to the substance of medieval medicine or to medical science at the turn of the century.

Noteworthy is the fact that the twelve bodily currents (meridians), as established in the science of acupuncture, conform quincuncially with the twelve signs of the zodiac.

To bring this short introduction into the medical aspects of the CSI to a conclusion, let us review the main principles which should serve to eliminate errors, false speculations, harmful and incorrect views of astro-medicine: Every earthly event is reflected cosmically, but not every planetary potential manifests on Earth. In most cases, then, in consultations using the cosmogram we are dealing with possible situations which are approachable through guidance, modification and treatment.

Of predominance in a cosmogram are constellations spanning several personal points by way of a half-sum and whose factors are in the most exact aspects of potential and discharge possible in the "classical" sense.

The following tables summarize the interpretative elements which are basic to the interpretation of the biological correspondence:

Biological Correspondences

Sun	Cell, Body, heart and circulatory system.
Dragon's Head	Hereditary factors, astral body, autonomic system.
Moon	Bodily fluids, blood, lymph. The soul.
Midheaven	Ego-consciousness, reason as "cerebral function."
Ascendant	Environment.

Mercury	Nervous system. Youth.
Venus	System of glands and hormones. Growth and maturity.
Mars	Muscles. Middle age, the prime of life.
Jupiter	Organic systems (lungs, liver, kidneys, spleen). The climacteric.
Saturn	Bones. Old age.
Uranus	Rhythmic systems (pulse, breathing, peristaltic).
Neptune	Weakness and slackness, paralysis (excretory system (?)).
Pluto	Change, transformation, regeneration (bodily defense system (?)).

Order of the Acupunctural Meridians
According to the Quincunx

Aries	Kidneys	Libra	Circulation, sexuality
Virgo	Large intestine	Pisces	Small intestine
Aquarius	Lungs	Leo	Heart
Cancer	Stomach	Capricorn	Gall bladder
Sagittarius	Pancreas, spleen	Gemini	Liver
Taurus	Triple thermo-generator	Scorpio	Bladder

The sociological relationships are developed logically from the principle under consideration and from the psychological correspondence.

The term "probable manifestations" pertains to psychological states or trends of destiny evolving when one member of a stellar pair, transiting or progressing, enters into conjunction with the other, a radical factor, e.g., Jupiter as a transit, solar arc direction or progression, enters into a characteristic aspect to natal Venus. Here, too, the positive or negative effect can only be read in connection with the natal chart as a whole or the concurrent constellations. The example of Venus opposition Jupiter has demonstrated that it is possible for positive and negative effects of character to appear in the psychological correspondences. Since a combination of various interpretative elements will always be involved, this book intends only to outline the method of psychological combinations without attempting to impose strict rules on the reader or the expert.

Besides the relationships existing between two factors of interpretation (31) a further extension of relationship is created by the incorporation of a third factor in the form of mid-points or half-sums relating to the stellar bodies—also named half-distance points or intersecting points. As the name implies, the interpretative factor is placed in this case in the center; that is, at the half distance, or expressed mathematically, in the “half-sum” of two other factors.

The use of such half-sums is not new, as can be seen from the method of rectification used by Guido Bonati (apparently born in the year 1230 at Cascia near Florence) who was the famous court astrologer of the Emperor Frederick II. Furthermore, Alan Leo, the well known English astrologer and founder of Modern Astrology, a journal now edited by Charles E. O. Carter in London, speaks of the mid-point between two planets which is touched as it were by the passage of a directed stellar body.

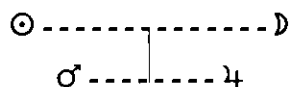

Another astrologer, Frank Glahn, writes (32) that he got his first knowledge of the “intersecting points” from Albert Knief, a particularly gifted astrologer whose writings had appeared at about 1900 in Hamburg. Alfred Witte, the founder of the Hamburg School of Astrology, had also been informed by Knief about the application of this method according to Glahn, and it is to Witte’s credit that he has introduced the latter working method to modern astrological practice, coining the name “planetary pictures” (“Planetenbilder” in German).

Witte distinguishes three kinds of planetary pictures (33):

1) The half-sums in which a stellar body is placed in the center of distance between two stellar bodies, e.g.:

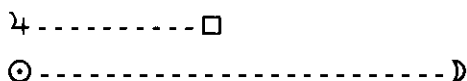

2) Several half-sums with a common “axis,” e.g.:

In this case it is not absolutely necessary that a stellar body is placed at the center of distance between the other stellar bodies or in the axis.

3) A stellar body forms an aspect of 45°, 90° or 135° to the center of distance between two stellar bodies (Angles of 45°, 90°, 135° and 180° are not arbitrary as they are marking electromagnetic fields of force which have been detected by dowzers.):

In the last example we have an indirect planetary picture because the stellar body is not placed at the center of distance with regard to the half-sum but forms an angle with that center.

The combination of various stellar bodies with one another forming planetary pictures can be expressed in form of equations, according to Witte, in which case example No. 2 could thus be written:

Sun + Moon - Mars = Jupiter

Such a formula may not be clear to many a reader. Furthermore there is another method of writing as well, in which the stroke of a fraction is used, which can be understood more simply and easily. Here the stroke symbolizes the half-sum, and the examples as given above could thus be written:

$$1) \mathbb{Z} = \mathbb{Q}/\mathbb{D}$$

$$2) \odot/\mathbb{D} = \sigma^*/4$$

3) 4 □ ⊙/⊕

Example No. 3 is also written according to Witte's School, thus:

Jupiter = Sun/Moon.

a mode of writing which has been adopted by various astrological schools or societies owing to its greater ease. It is, however, more accurate to write the symbols for the aspects in order to distinguish direct and indirect planetary pictures from one another. For the purpose of better understanding, the various modes of writing are illustrated by means of drawings.

In Fig. 2 the Moon, Uranus and the Dragon's Head form a grand trine, that is a distance of approximately 120° to one another. According to the principle of traditional astrology one would judge this stellar grouping as a grand trine only. But at the same time we are also dealing with a direct half-sum because Uranus is placed in the center of distance or in the half-sum between the Moon and the Dragon's Head, written thus:

$$\text{♄} = \text{D}/\text{♁}$$

If one wishes to calculate this constellation exactly, one must count the distances of the stellar bodies in degrees from 0° Aries (first point of Aries). There we have:

	Moon	= $5^\circ 51'$ Cancer	= $95^\circ 51'$
	Dragon's Head	= $1^\circ 51'$ Scorpio	= $211^\circ 51'$
Sum:	Moon/Dragon's Head		= $307^\circ 42'$
Half-sum:	Moon/Dragon's Head		= $153^\circ 51'$
			= $3^\circ 51'$ Virgo/Pisces

In exact investigations one writes the degree numbers below the names of the stellar bodies, thus:

$$\begin{array}{l} \text{Uranus} = \text{Moon/Dragon's Head} \\ 3^\circ 46' \qquad \qquad 3^\circ 51' \end{array}$$

One can see from this equation that the half-sum is exact within $5'$ (min. of arc).

Fig. 3 shows Neptune in the half-sum between Jupiter and Pluto. In this case it is not a question of an aspect formed as in the previous example because the distance from Neptune to both Jupiter and Pluto ranges between 35° and 36° .

Equally, one could talk about the existence of half-sums if the distance of Neptune from Jupiter and Pluto were only 2° to 3° , or 5° and 76° , in fact, any other distance. In the case of half-sums, the important thing to remember is that a stellar body need only have the same distance to two other stellar bodies in order to form a half-sum combination. This latter half-sum is thus expressed by the following equation:

$$\Psi = \lambda / \phi$$

Fig. 4 pictures two half-sums with a common axis. At approx. 16° Virgo/Pisces we have the mid-point between Moon and Asc., as well as the mid-point between Venus and Mars. The equation is thus written:

$$D/As = \varphi / \sigma$$

This half-sum can be triggered by the influence of transits or directions.

Fig. 5 contains the various possibilities of the indirect half-sums. Supposing that the Asc. is $26^\circ 30'$ Scorpio, a half-sum may fall upon $26^\circ 30'$ Scorpio or Taurus as a direct half-sum, whereas the indirect half-sums are in semisquare to the Asc. by virtue of being situated at 11°30' Capricorn and Libra respectively or in square to the Asc. when situated at 26°30' Leo and Aquarius or in sesquiquadrate to the Asc. when situated at 11°30' Aries and Cancer. In this example, the Asc. is connected with the half-sum Mercury/Venus by a square aspect and with the half-sum Jupiter/Dragon's Head by a semisquare aspect. Therefore we write:

$$As \square \frac{\text{♄}}{\text{♀}} \angle \frac{4}{\text{♄}}$$

As regards the potency of influence brought about by combinations of stellar bodies, it is evident that the position of a stellar body exactly on the mid-point or half-sum of two stellar bodies is stronger than a position in which the same stellar body would only form an aspect other than a conjunction with the mid-point or half-sum in question which latter case means an indirect half-sum (34). In his Doctrine of Aspects, Dr. W. Koch (35) points out that a planet which belongs to a mid-point or half-sum combination becomes particularly important if at the same time an aspect combination involving that planet is also taking place, as shown in Fig. 2. "Whilst clear aspect pictures always exert a form-yielding power, the same cannot be said about mere half-sums." If aspects are not exact, i.e., if they have a wide orb, planets in conjunction with the mid-point or half-sum of the aspect-forming stellar bodies will thus strengthen the effect of this stellar combination.

Whereas the Hamburg School of Astrology rests almost entirely upon the interpretation of the planetary pictures, neglecting the traditional aspects at the same time, such a procedure is just as partial according to our modern findings as if one ignores the mid-points or half-sums and judges the aspects only. Numerous investigations and experiments have proved that the simultaneous use of both half-sums and aspects leads to successful results. Moreover, the inclusion of a third interpretative factor also restricts the number of possible interpretations, thus leading to a more exactly defined statement as to the correctness of the interpretation.

The use of half-sums requires the definition of a smaller orb than used normally for aspects. When considering aspects in the radical map, an orb of 5° is generally recommended, whereas the orbs or half-sums should preferably range between $1\frac{1}{2}^{\circ}$ and 3° (the latter being the maximum-limit). For directions, however, the orb used is $1\frac{1}{2}^{\circ}$ only. With regard to transits and their effects the writer believes the following rule to be correct, namely that a transiting stellar body exercises its influence for such a period only as it requires to pass through one degree of the zodiac. This corresponds to a duration of influence amounting to one day for the Sun, approximately two hours for the Moon, but often several months for Neptune.

Witte wrote his Set of Rules for the Interpretation of Planetary Pictures as an explanatory commentary to his Planetary Equations (35), a work which really appeared to be revolutionary and provoked an unusual and mostly adverse criticism. The author has used that work extensively in his research and also promoted it until he realized that Witte did not go about in the right way with regard to interpretation.

Witte has certainly built his work upon practical experience and found for example the following rules:

Saturn + Uranus - Sun : Sudden physical separation.

- Moon : Sudden separation from a female
- Mercury : Sudden saying good-bye. The necessity of a journey. Thinking under irritation.
- Mars : Violent end through injury, etc.

The question arises here whether these rules of interpretation are built securely enough upon empirical and statistical data so that they can be applied as generally valid rules. The interpretation given for Saturn + Saturn - Mars, "Violent end through injury," is in any case so grave that it will probably only apply in a few cases. What Witte wanted to obtain with his method of work maybe deduced from the commentary made by his colleague Sieggruen: "The Hamburg School arranges the stellar influences in equations which remain constant for events of the same kind and on this teaching differs in principle from classical astrology, the interpretations of which form a chaos, whilst the equations of the Hamburg School correspond to scientific thinking as applied in the natural and exact sciences" (37). This objective must be recognized, as the given rules could often be confirmed for the interpretation of past events but were not suitable for prognostications.

Owing to the detailed study of numerous horoscopes, Witte was led to suppose the existence of four transneptunian planets which he named Hades, Cupido, Zeus and Chronos, also calculating ephemerides for them. Moreover, he established entirely new relationships between the stellar bodies and the zodiacal signs (regarding rulerships), worked with so-called mirror or reflection points (antiscion), created a new house system with Earth houses, Sun houses, Moon houses, etc., and therefore created a multitude of new interpretive elements while rejecting numerous elements of tradition at the same time so that severe criticism arose quite justifiably (38). And yet Witte's School has not heeded the obvious criticisms of its early method of working and apparently does not grasp that everything can be deduced all the more easily after the events have taken place owing to the unlimited augmentation of interpretive elements in the birth chart. The hard work which Witte and his colleagues have expended in the pursuit of their cause does not excuse their lack of astrological interpretation and its basic idea. Witte constructed planetary pictures under suppositions which can be neither explained nor proved both by the use of the usual planets, except in tradition, and the four new transneptunian planets which he claims to have discovered by recognized astrological procedure and the character of which he maintains to know most exactly.

There are thus 2,280 new claims without substantiation and without proof. The attempt to verify one thing or another does not yield positive results. Witte's system in its present form is therefore beyond any discussion. However, some of Witte's ideas may yet prove useful, at some future time. Thus writes Baron Klöckler (39), whom one must consider as one of the most eminent scientific astrologers of our time. He also devotes a chapter to the half-distance or mid-points in his book of interpretation (40) but advocates their use with caution.

Witte's set of rules was a commendable pointer in the right direction for tackling the problem of interpretation, but his own interpretations of events were "hanging in the air" because he failed to develop, substantiate and prove his system of interpretation.

Frank Glahn, a pupil of Witte, author of several textbooks and editor of a monthly astrological journal, made the following comments:

"Witte's articles signify the grave error of too little explanation and substantiation and of too many astrological calculations coupled together with endless citations concerning directions! Witte calculated his four planets from the judgment of horoscopes! Such a procedure must make any astronomer shake his head in wonder, but we can at least comprehend the astronomical calculations leading to the discovery of Neptune. Even as late as 1937, the Hamburg School still refused to make prognostications and confined itself only to investigate past events. The intention is good; however, the result is unfortunately devoid of any value at all owing to the reasons stated (through the overwhelming number of interpretative elements). There is neither any bias against innovations nor against the Hamburg School as such, as the author has always had regard for A. Witte's teaching as well as for the person himself. But as long as modern astrology can obtain the same results without any further undiscovered planets, the author must reject hypothetical planets, whether the latter are proposed by Witte or anybody else" (41).

In spite of this criticism, Glahn also incorporated the half-distance or mid-point in the subject matter of his textbook, using them mainly for the rectification of birth time. One must, however, admit that Witte's set of rules has proved of good value for such rectifications but not for prognostications, which became obvious very soon. If one noticed the following constellation in one's own natal chart for example—Jupiter = Mars/Hades interpreted as “suicide, malicious murder or an act causing upset or damage”—then such a statement may cause great agitation to the person concerned, probably also leading to a state of neurotic anxiety. As editor of the magazine Mensch im All, the author used to receive many letters containing the question whether the indicated tendency of suicide should be taken seriously. This was the consequence of rendering the interpretations stated in the set of rules in such a way as if they were really quite definite and as if the destiny would have to be fulfilled in the indicated direction. Such experiences confirmed the author's opinion that rules given as explained are not fit for use in scientific astrology (42).

A short consideration of the term “Rule and Combination” is necessary at this juncture in order to appreciate the method of interpretation as used by the author and that used by Witte. Let us take, for example, Saturn/Uranus, for which Witte gives the following definition without further substantiation and explanation: “Sudden separation” (43).

Let us now formulate:

Saturn = Inhibition
and Uranus = Sudden agitation.

Thus we get:

Saturn/Uranus = Emotional tension.

The corresponding definitions to “emotional tension” are:

Inner irritability, nervous unrest, rebelliousness, the urge to be free (in order to liberate oneself from a given restricting situation).

The following manifestations can now be assumed as probable:

Causation of unrest in the environment, separation, measures of force or compulsion etc.

In that way we get the following picture:

Interpretation of the Combination According to Ebertin

Cosmic Constellation: Saturn/Uranus
Principle: Saturn = Inhibition
Uranus = Sudden agitation

Psychological
Correspondence: Saturn/Uranus = Emotional tension

Psychological Release:

Irritability	Nervousness	Rebellion	The urge to be free
↙	↙	↓	↓
Causation of unrest in the environment		Separation	The use of force

Interpretation According to the Rules Laid Down by Witte

Cosmic constellation: Saturn/Uranus
Principle: ?
Psychological Correspondence: ?
Psychological Release: ?
Possible Event: Sudden separation

It follows from this demonstration that the interpretation of the half-sums as given in this book differ basically from the original rules of the Hamburg School in definition, practical evaluation and method of interpretation.

The interpretative combinations must not always be taken literally; they are meant to serve as a guide to interpretative combination. Besides, one must consider that a certain emotional state or an event is never caused only by one particular constellation because every reactive manifestation is built up from various causes as the following example shows:

$$\odot = D/h \quad \odot = h/M \quad \Psi = \Omega \quad M(\text{progr.}) = \sigma/h$$

Psychological Correspondence:

Sad mood	Emotional suffering	Disappointment in association	Mourning
----------	---------------------	----------------------------------	----------

Probable Manifestations:

Sad mood affecting the physical body	Illness through emotional suffering	The end of an association	Separation
---	--	------------------------------	------------

Summary: Emotional suffering or mourning through the termination of an association or separation.

The Actual Circumstances: A child saw his playmate overrun and killed by a lorry. The above constellations reflect the child's state of mind, but it is difficult to determine the event itself, i.e., the death of the playmate, from the positions of the stellar bodies without further data.

In the journal Kosmobiologie (44) the right answers relating to more than thirty problems on this subject matter have thus been found in the course of years. For example, the following question was put for the 27th problem: What happened to a male born January 22, 1921, on May 17, 1938 and December 9, 1938? For this purpose, the radix horoscope of the native indicating the stellar positions had been given, which can be seen from Fig. 6.

Now let us take the most important constellations pertaining to transits which affect the radix figure only. The transiting Sun at $26^{\circ}10'$ Taurus is in opposition to the Asc. (marked "A" in Fig. 6) which may be interpreted as "one's mental attitude to other people."

Further, the transiting Sun is square the mid-point or half-sum of Mercury/Venus at $26^{\circ}18'$ Aquarius (Asc. radix is square the half-sum of Mercury/Venus radix as well) interpreted as: "thoughts of love, sociability." Transiting Neptune at $18^{\circ}24'$ Virgo is in conjunction with Jupiter radix, interpreted as: "Seeming or apparent good fortune." Neptune/trans. square Venus/MC at $18^{\circ}27'$ Sagittarius interpreted as: "Peculiar attitude concerning the problem of love, shyness, dislike."

The transiting Dragon's Head at $26^{\circ}58'$ Scorpio is in conjunction with the Asc., interpreted as: "Pleasant contact," but it is in square to the mid-point of Mercury/Venus radix, interpreted as "Sociability, exchange of thought."

The transiting Mars at 16°35' Gemini is in square to the mid-point of Venus/Mars radix at 15°14' Pisces and in square to Venus radix at 17°24' Pisces, interpreted as: "The urge to express love."

Mars trans. = Sun/Dragon's Head radix at 16°43' Sagittarius, interpreted as: "Union dictated by an emotional urge."

Transiting Venus at 21°30' Gemini is in square to the mid-point of Jupiter/Saturn radix at 21°26' Virgo, interpreted as: "Changing fortune in love, inconstancy in love."

Summary: Thoughts of love led to an approach dictated by emotional urges without a visualization of a future union as consequence.

Actual circumstances: Commencement of a love-association.

On December 9, 1938, the following constellation occurred: The transiting Sun at 16°45' Sagittarius (in opposition to transiting Mars, initiating the love contact) was in square to the mid-point of Venus/Mars radix and in square to Venus radix, interpreted as: "Physical love." Transiting Pluto at 1°12' Leo is in opposition to Sun radix and in square to the Dragon's Head radix, interpreted as: "Lack of adaptability, separation." (See also: Dragon's Head radix = Sun radix/Pluto transiting.) The transiting Neptune at 23°15' Virgo was in conjunction with Saturn radix, interpreted as: "Suffering, renunciation."

Transiting Saturn at 11°15' Aries was in sesquiquadrate to the Asc. radix, interpreted as: "Going one's way, separation."

Transiting Saturn is in semi-square to the mid-point of Mercury/Venus radix at 26°18' Aquarius, interpreted as: "Viewing life seriously, the urge to retreat into seclusion."

Transiting Uranus at 14°37' Taurus is in square to the mid-point of Moon/Saturn radix at 15°11' Leo, interpreted as: "Impulsive release of inner tensions, the urge to rid oneself of inhibitions, sudden emotional suffering, separation."

Uranus transiting = Dragon's Head/Asc. at 14°10' Scorpio, interpreted as: "Sudden experiences in associations with others."

Summary: Owing to a serious outlook on life and a lack of adaptability, the attempt was made to liberate himself from inner tension and to terminate a love association.

We see the radix chart of the young man from the attached figure. On the inside of the outermost circle the main transiting constellations taking place on May 17, 1938 are given, whereas the main constellations of December 9, 1938 are indicated on the outside of the largest and limiting circle. For reasons of clarity the relations between the stellar positions of May 17, 1938 and the radix have been marked. Some radix positions have already been explained in figure 2 or 5. Thorough investigation compels one to admit that it is difficult to construct the events from the aspect relationships of the transiting stellar bodies alone, and also that the picture becomes clearer only after the consideration of the half-sums.

Experience up to now has shown that the aspects as well as the direct and indirect half-sums must be taken into consideration in the investigation of the cosmogram in order to obtain comprehensive results. Since the aspects allow for a broad range of interpretive possibilities, the interpretive content will be limited and differentiated through the inclusion of a third factor of interpretation, i.e., the half-sums.

With the exception of the chapter, "The Yearly Rhythm as a Basis for Interpretation," the sections on the significance of Sun, Moon, planets, Ascendant, Midheaven and Moon's Node in the signs and houses, the reader will find in this book no references to positions in the so-called houses. Due to the fact that there is to the present day still an abundance of house systems extant, which for the most part are full of very dubious and biased interpretations, this book dispenses with any interpretation of positions, aspects, transits, etc. in relation to the houses. It has become evident through daily practice that excellent results in interpretation can be achieved without having recourse to the traditional systems of houses.

Nonetheless, recent research, in particular that of Dr. Theodor Landscheidt (45), has established that a certain influence can be assigned to the cusps according to the GOH house system of Dr. Walter Koch (46). This research is still in the initial stages, and not enough reliable material has been gathered as yet to suffice for a psychological interpretation. For this reason this book does not deal with any house interpretation.

In recent years it has been possible to publish well-corroborated ephemerides and books on fixed star positions and structures (47), (48), (49). Therefore, more importance will have to be attached in future to the fixed star positions in the personal natal chart.

The Aim of this Book

The present work is concerned with one aspect of the field of cosmobiology: the interpretation of the stellar bodies and other astronomical points in the individual's natal chart. The emphasis lies in the cosmobiological characterology and the shaping of destiny.

Since the first edition of The Combination of Stellar Influences was published, this book has established itself as a standard reference work for the reliable and conscientious interpretation of cosmograms and planetary configurations.

I am very much indebted to the many readers of the journal Kosmobiology, and in particular to Dr. Walter Koch, Dr. H. Verleger, Prof. Gerhard Krüger, and H.G. Müller-Freywardt, M.D., for additions, factual reports, criticism, suggestions and ideas. Dr. Baldur R. Ebertin has contributed in great part to this "Introduction," and I take this opportunity to extend to him my heartfelt thanks.

In this case it is better to use the more comprehensive term "stellar bodies," which includes Sun and Moon, and the planets.

42) As has been stated by a member of the Hamburg School, recent years have seen the attempt to continue on the Wittean groundwork, which has brought completely new results, out-dating Witte's set of rules entirely. This applies especially to Witte's hypothetical planets. An astronomer commissioned by the Hamburg School to give an opinion on the many discrepancies and typographical errors contained in the ephemerides, also undertook an investigation of the Wittean planets Cupido, Hades, Zeus and Chronos. He came to the conclusion that these hypothetical planets were connected with the Uranian and Neptunian synodic intervals, i.e., the Wittean planets are not planets, but vibration. The Hamburg School's "sensitive points" do not pertain solely to the half-sums, but also apply to the planetary sums and differences. Experience has shown a value of $1^{\circ}04'$ to obtain for the orb, i.e., only 32 minutes to either side. All the details cannot be discussed in full here, since the aim of this book is to establish a universal book of interpretation applicable to all methods.

Author's Note: The author does not reject the division of the chart into sections but he can no longer go along with the traditional astrological interpretations of the houses. If we must interpret the second house as relating to finance, the seventh to marriage and the eighth as matters relating to death, it becomes impossible to evaluate the chart on a scientific basis. The traditional interpretations of the houses can lead to results which, from a psychological and moral standpoint, are irresponsible. There are still many systems of house division, many of which seem to contradict each other. As agreement on the correct one is not yet possible, the reader would be advised to give up the idea of interpretation of the chart on this basis.

¹ In traditional astrology the Ascendant rather than the MC was always considered of the greatest importance. The interpretation of the MC as "I" was originally introduced by Alfred Witte. In the opinion of the author, the term ego-consciousness is perhaps better. This interpretation was not known or used a few thousand years ago because the ego-consciousness as it is understood today had not then yet developed. More about this can be found in Jean Gebser's Ursprung und Gegenwart, Stuttgart 1949. The paintings in the pyramids reveal that the artists at that time did not have any knowledge of perspective. They drew two dimensionally. It was not until the time of Michelangelo that perspective was discovered, as man learned to see in three dimensions. It was through this that man began to realize the distance of things and recognize his own self in contrast to the material world and other people. It was at this time that the real "I-consciousness" developed. Although Christ's "It is I" is often considered as the origin of the "I-experience" as opposed to the former "We-experience." Practical experience has further borne out this interpretation of the MC. In cases of "ego diseases" the MC has been found to be repeatedly involved. (The "ego-diseases" seem to be the result of false or distorted relationships with other people.)

² It has been noted that this book omits interpretations of mid-point combinations in which the axis factor is already one of the components of the mid-point. If for example we are considering the mid-point Sun/Moon in a chart neither Sun or Moon can actually occupy the axis. But they can however enter this axis by transit or by direction e.g. Sun = Sun/Moon or Moon = Sun/Moon. This raises the question of whether this combination has any particular value. It would appear that in cases of this kind that the doubled factor comes out more strongly. In the case of Sun = Sun/Moon, one can assume that the Sun factor will be particularly emphasized, bringing out the male, mental side. In the case of Moon = Sun/Moon, it is possible that the Moon factor will predominate accentuating the female, emotional and unconscious side. It should be pointed out again however that the interpretations in this book are not meant to be taken exactly word for word and applied literally without any trouble or consideration. One should always combine the individual factors and interpret the chart as a whole.

⁵In interpretations on the basis of transits or directions the conditions and circumstances of the native would always be considered. A call-up for military service can only occur if the native is a certain age or if a war has broken out. At other times such a combination would work out differently. In the case of criminals Uranus = Sun/Mars might result in imprisonment. These combinations may perhaps best be interpreted as a compulsory change in the life and the work of the native.

- Periods of impotence and weakness alternating with periods of brutal or ruthless progress and advancement in life. All will-directed activity meets complete resistance (as governed by circumstances). Tests of strength, disputes, separations, illnesses. Cases of death.

³⁷ One is inclined at times to consider Mars/Saturn as the "death axis." This combination is found in many cases at the time of death, but one should not make the mistake of taking it for granted that death will result. During the course of life this "death axis" is very often stimulated by transits and directions, but life continues. Such periods are often marked by difficulties and illness, difficulties to be overcome or the death of other people. It should also be taken into consideration that life is often prolonged through medical science or new medical equipment through which many people near death are kept alive.

Mars/Saturn ♂/♄

0699 = ☉

Weak vitality, inability to meet all demands or master all situations, need to overcome illness. Illness or death of male persons.

0700 = ♀

Weakness of will, a mood or fit of depression, lack of courage. Illness, separation or death of female persons.

0709 = M³⁹

Endurance, power of resistance, indefatigable. The need to overcome many difficulties in life, ability to bear the suffering of the soul (with dignity and without complaint). Mourning and bereavement (death).

Mars/Saturn has only related to accidents or some kind of suffering if the native was in a position and an environment and conditions which made such serious consequences possible.

³⁹ There are many people who have MC = Mars/Saturn in their chart and yet live to an old age. However, the first part of this interpretation is correct as these people are very tough and have a great deal of perseverance, having to use an exceptional amount of energy in order to keep their place at work and maintain their position in life.

Mars/Uranus⁴⁰

0710 ♂/♄

Principle

A sudden application of effort, a bodily intervention (an operation).

Probable Manifestations

+ Unusual achievements through an extraordinary power of effort, inclination to act too hastily or prematurely, a danger or peril which has fortunately passed.

- The passing of a test of nerves, struggle for survival, accident, injury, operation (birth).

⁴⁰ The mid-point Mars/Uranus is often interpreted as the "operation axis" and this has been substantiated both in the case of directions and transits. But one cannot say for certain that these combinations will mean an operation. In cases where an operation is inevitable, other combinations usually must be present. The correspondence "operation" is only one possibility of this combination.

Mars/Uranus ♂/♅

0711 = ☉

A sound physique capable of sudden extra effort, a person who is able to act quickly. A sudden adjustment to new circumstances and conditions in life, injury, accident, operation, birth.

- Failures caused through wrong arrangements or instructions or through premature action, quarrels or disputes.

⁴⁶ Combinations of Mars/MC appear to particularly strengthen the determination (Mars) of the ego (MC) and this varies with age. Dr. Martin König writes that Mercury pr. = Mars/MC can be interpreted as an "examination combination." He says: "The Mars/MC axis shows the activity of the native. Mercury in this axis shows activity on a mental plane or perhaps a fight with mental weapons. As an addition to the well proven rules I would suggest the following: 'concentrated mental activity, discussion, exams, debate.'"

Mars/Medium Coeli ♂/M

0771 = ☉

Power of attainment, urge to become important, a strong will. Desire to attain success in life at all costs, ability to procure the power for giving orders to others, overcoming resistance or obstacles.

- Lack of stamina and vitality, confused psychic states, peculiar inclinations, losses.

⁵⁸ Even though the conjunction of Uranus and Neptune does not appear in the charts of the present generation these effects do occur in the case of directions and transits.

For rectification of the time of birth it is useful to examine the death of relatives and it often will be found that Uranus/Neptune was in the death axis at the time. In the statistical examination of several hundred still births this configuration was found very frequently. However this also is found in the case of a period of temporary unconsciousness. It is therefore important never to give this interpretation when directions occur stating that death is likely. So often this mid-point occurs in life without the worst happening. We cannot too often stress the importance of being careful in these cases.

Uranus/Neptune ♅/♆

0939 = ☉

Lack of vitality, sensitive physique, impressionable. Unconsciousness, illness, lifelessness or impassiveness. (Epilepsy.)

Principle

The common destiny of a large mass of people.

Psychological Correspondence

+ Urge to seek contacts or associations with many people, the wish to become a public figure or to exercise influence upon other people.

- Feeling one's association with other people as a burden or that one's style is cramped through the influence of others, with subsequent suffering from this.

C Unions or associations brought about by the particular circumstances of one's destiny, a karmic link.

Biological Correspondence

Embryonic growth. Disturbances in pregnancy caused by the fetus. Hyperemesis gravidarum (continued vomiting during pregnancy). Eclampsia (acute toxemia occurring in pregnancy, parturition or in the puerperium associated with convulsions and loss of consciousness).

Sociological Correspondence

Crowds or large groups of people, mass meetings. Large business concerns.

Probable Manifestations

+ The beginning of new associations which may possibly be important with regard to one's future.

- A common and tragic destiny shared with other persons.

Pluto/Dragon's Head ♄/♁

1047 = ☉

The urge to ruthlessly impose one's will upon others, and vice versa.

1048 = ♃

The feeling of emotional inhibition in the presence of other people, inability to develop one's inner expression of soul or feeling.

1049 = ♅

Desire to dominate other people intellectually or mentally. Ability to exercise a compelling and magnetically powerful influence upon the community at large.

1050 = ♀

An unusual power of attraction to other people, a tragic love union.

1051 = ♂

Demonstration of violence or brutality in the presence of other people. The desire to make others amenable to one's own wishes, the misfortune to be placed in someone else's hand and power.

1052 = ♄

Desire to obtain position and power by force through the help of other people. Attainment of great gains through others.

1053 = ♃

Lack of adaptability, rebelliousness or truculence, revolt, fighting against oppression. Violent termination of relationships.

1054 = ♅

Big upsets within a community, emotional suffering through separation.

1055 = ♀

Attainment of success within a community by means of lies and fraud. Disadvantages and losses.

1056 = ♀

Desire to gain influence upon the public.

1057 = ♀

Frequent dependence of a person's future upon associations and contacts with others. Associations often influence one's objectives in life and cause setbacks in one's vocation.

Pluto/Ascendant 1058 ♄/A

Principle

The rule and control over one's environment. A fascinating personality.

Psychological Correspondence

+ Willpower, ambition, striving for power, utilization of magical or psychic forces. Display of an unusual personal influence.

- Dictatorship or rule by force. Desire to bring other people under the rule of one's own will. Repulsive behavior.

C Striving for the attainment of power and authority. Tendency to suppress or oppress others. Attainment of success in life by brutal and ruthless means.

Biological Correspondence

Physical change or transformation, the commencing phase of a disease, convalescence.

Sociological Correspondence

People exercising a fascinating power or influence upon others through their own peculiar personality.

Probable Manifestations

+ Desire to attain success in life at all costs, making unusual contacts or acquaintances, a readjustment of conditions or circumstances.

- Violent disputes, quarrels, injuries, accidents. A drastic or radical change of one's circumstances in life.

Pluto/Ascendant ♄/A

1059 = ☉

Ruthless conduct with regard to people in one's environment, attainment of respect and esteem through physical prowess and strength.

1060 = ♃

Strong emotional response to the influence coming from one's environment or, alternately, the wielding of a powerful psychic influence upon others.

1061 = ♁

Urge to dominate other people's minds, suggestion, hypnosis.

1062 = ♀

Ability to wield an influence upon others by means of an extremely attractive personality. A strong love union.

1063 = ♂

Foolhardiness and daring, tendency to expose oneself to danger. Injury, accident.

1064 = ♃

An imposing and powerful personality, generosity. A large gain, the good fortune to receive a present, a favorable turn of circumstances in life.

1065 = ♃

Suffering from forcible suppression, being subjected to coercive measures. Emotional suffering caused through the sickness of other people.

1066 = ♄

A frequent change of environment, the misfortune to live in constant anxiety and restlessness. Extraordinary incidents and upsets, accidents.

1067 = ♄

The misfortune to suffer from the actions of bad, malicious and deceitful people within one's environment. Experiencing a most awkward and unfortunate situation.

1068 = Ω

Sharing the same destiny together with others. Tendency to enter into unusual associations.

1069 = M

Attainment of power and authority in life. Attainment of success in one's career or occupation in life. A fascinating personality.

Pluto/Medium Coeli
1070 ♀/M

Principle

The shaping of the individuality.

Psychological Correspondence

+ Desire to become important, growth and development of strength. The power to attain success in life, ability to organize, prudence, vision, authority.

- Foolhardy and daring, licentious. The abuse of power, an antisocial conduct. Tendency to create feelings of resistance and vindictiveness in other people.

C Authority. Ability to maintain one's position in life. Fame.

Biological Correspondence

Desire to recuperate or to regain one's health. Decision to undergo an operation. A change of therapy.

Sociological Correspondence

People excelling in their particular profession or occupation. Experts of great authority in their particular field.

Probable Manifestations

+ Attainment of recognition and power. Inclination to look upon one's vocation or calling as a mission. Inner change and transformation, readjustment of one's circumstances in life. Attainment of greater independence than enjoyed hitherto.

- The likelihood of sudden ruin through the misuse of power, a crisis at a certain juncture in life, a turn in one's destiny brought about by providence.

Pluto/Medium Coeli ♄/M

1071 = ☉

Desire to obtain power and authority. Ability to stand on one's own feet, the power of one's personality in attaining success in life.

1072 = ♃

Inner greatness, ability to exercise a great influence upon others on account of one's own inner qualities. A woman with personality and the qualities of leadership.

1073 = ♄⁶⁶

A great mind, attainment of recognition and fame in the sphere of science. A person with great powers of suggestion.

1074 = ♀

An unusual power of attraction, unusually strong attachments.

1075 = ♂

Great striving for power, urge to dominate other people. The misfortune to be forced into an uncongenial profession or occupation. A crisis in one's career.

1076 = ♃

Unusual objectives and unusual successes. The possession of financial power.

1077 = ♄

Self-sacrifice. Attainment of one's objectives through sacrifices. A toilsome struggle of existence, a death or bereavement.

1078 = ♄

Restless, indefatigable, enduring, prudent, organizing ability. Sudden attainment of one's aim or aspiration with irresistible power, sudden occupational changes.

1079 = ♄

Peculiar objectives in life, mystic vision, purified and refined soul life, great imagination. A person subject to wrong ideas, taking the wrong path. The experience of grave disappointments.

⁶⁶ Mercury = Pluto/MC should not only be interpreted as success in an academic subject but as success in a specialized field or profession.

1080 = Ω

Desire to gain leadership by force in a community or group of people.
The power of influence over other people.

1081 = A

Procurement of an important position and of recognition under any condition. A person of fame.

Dragon's Head/Ascendant 1082 ♀/A

Principle

Personal relationships.

Psychological Correspondence

+ Harmonious conduct within the family circle and within one's own personal environment, as well as with one's associates or colleagues in work. A social conscience.

- Disharmonious conduct within one's personal environment, an anti-social outlook.

C The ability, to get along well with others.

Biological Correspondence

The power of faculty of memory (in a more subconscious manner).

The internal respiration (oxygen metabolism).

Sociological Correspondence

One's family, colleagues and associates, fellowship.

Probable Manifestations

+ Agreeable contacts with others, profitable teamwork. Sharing the same interests with other people.

- Estrangements, separations. Increasing difficulties with regard to the relationship between people sharing the same residence.

Dragon's Head/Ascendant N/A

1083 = ☉

Cultivation of social contacts and social entertainment. Desire to meet other people. A new contact with a man.

1084 = ♀

Desire to establish an inner bond or contact with other people, ability to gain an understanding of other people both by instinct and feeling, sympathetic understanding of other people. The establishment of contact with others. A female acquaintanceship.

1085 = ☿

Desire and the inclination to seek and receive mental stimuli, demonstration of interest. Sharing the same thoughts with others, studies and research with other people.

1086 = ♀

Agreeable, affectionate or tactful treatment of other persons. The establishment of a union between people through the expression of the same interests and feelings. A love union.

1087 = ♂

Desire to achieve something with others, a working association of people for the pursuit of the same objectives. A union based entirely on physical attraction.

1088 = ♃

Sociable. Amusements and entertainments. A liking for festivities and festivals, sharing of enjoyments and joyful occasions with other people. Happy unions and fortunate associations.

1089 = ♅

Feeling of oppression or suppression in the presence of other people. Inhibitions with regard to social contacts, sometimes leading a person into life of seclusion and separation. Mourning and bereavement.

1090 = ♄

Perpetual desire for company, sudden seeking of contacts. Sudden experiences with one's associates.

1091 = ♆

Emotional inhibitions or wrong impressions and perceptions.

Weakening and termination of associations or unions caused through lies and deceitfulness.

1092 = ♀

The misfortune of having to live or to work together with others through an act of compulsion, strange or fated associations.

1093 = M

Desire to establish an inner contact with other persons. Striving for close cooperation with other people. The expression of communal sense.

Dragon's Head/Medium Coeli 1094 ♀/M

Principle

Individual relationships.

Psychological Correspondence

+ Desire to seek people with the same ideas as oneself, enthusiasm for joint ideals and aspirations, tendency to lay stress on inner understanding as regards one's personal relationships with others.

- Inconstancy in the pursuit of joint objectives. Inclination to differ from other people and show it. Placing one's own personal interests and objectives above those of the community or the group to which one belongs.

C Desire for individual associations.

Biological Correspondence

The sidereal or astral body and ego-consciousness. The psychic or inner stress of the soul. (The half-sum Dragon's Head/Medium Coeli indicates in what manner the position of the Moon in the chart will be utilized personally.)

Sociological Correspondence

Associations of people with the same interests. Friends with the same outlook on life.

Probable Manifestations

+ Establishment of an association for the attainment of joint objectives. Unions based on a mutual inner understanding.

- Cropping up of difficulties in the pursuit of joint and common interests between people.

Dragon's Head/Medium Coeli ♀/M

1095 = ☉

Maintaining an association through shared interests. Unions based both upon physical and upon emotional factors. The inner ties of a man.

1096 = ♀

The strong part played by the feelings in unions between people, creation of a cozy atmosphere when with another person. An emotional character. The inner ties of a woman.

1097 = ☿

Emotional inclinations linked with spiritual and intellectual aspirations. Establishment of an association through shared thoughts and plans. Mutually stimulating exchange of ideas.

1098 = ♀

Urge to reveal one's innermost feelings and inclinations in personal associations. The capacity to love with one's whole heart.

1099 = ♂

Comradeship and team spirit, intensely working with one's colleagues, an association or organization fighting to uphold the common ideas and principles. Inner attachment and physical attraction.

1100 = ♃

Love of jolly parties and entertainment. A liking of social meetings with others in a cozy atmosphere. A happy communion of souls.

1101 = ♎

A marked preference for going one's own way, withdrawal into oneself. An egoistic person, desire to be alone and tendency to shun the company of others. A person who lives alone or who cuts himself off from others.

1102 = ♁

Acts of impulsiveness, sudden emotional and inner reactions. Behaving excitedly and restlessly in the presence of others. Sudden and deeply moving inner experiences shared with others.

1103 = ♀

A lack of adaptability in individual relationships, experiencing difficulties in maintaining contacts and associations with other people. Separation caused through the process of sobering and “coming down to earth again” and through disappointment or deceit. Mourning and bereavement, a grievous loss.

1104 = ♀

Attainment of success in associations or partnerships by the use of force. Selecting one’s coworkers, organizing power, great achievements shared with others.

1105 = A

Harmonious living together, one’s emotional attitude to others. Establishing one’s own home. Associations based on an inner understanding between people.

Ascendant/Medium Coeli⁶⁷ 1106 A/M

Principle

Relationship between the ego (higher self) and the lower self (personality).

Psychological Correspondence

The living being, the individual synthesis, is founded upon the relationship between ego and self. As both the Ascendant and the Medium Coeli are determined mathematically and astronomically, a characterization can only evolve when further configurations have reference to these two points.

Biological Correspondence

The phenotype in contrast to the combinations Sun/Moon, Moon/Medium Coeli and Dragon's Head/Medium Coeli expressing relationships to the genotype (hereditary factors).

Sociological Correspondence

The personality as directed by ego-consciousness.

Probable Manifestations

Connections between the Asc. and the MC when brought out by progressions or transits indicate important periods of life which can be characterized and colored only through the addition and incorporation of other factors.

⁶⁷ The mid-point AS/MC should always be examined as this, frequently has a bearing on the whole personality and because directions over this point may result in a change of life and circumstances.

Ascendant/Medium Coeli A/M

1107 = ☉

The relationship between body and soul, a person's attitude to other persons. The man in his sphere of life and activity. Going together, living together, attitude to the male principle in general.

1108 = ♀

One's personal attitude to life as governed by feeling, seeking a cordial understanding with others, a person guided primarily by instinct. Attitude to the female principle in general. Association with the female sex.

1109 = ♂

Exchange of thoughts, use of one's critical faculties. A frank discussion between people, cooperation in the scientific or commercial sphere.

1110 = ♀

A sense of beauty, desire to have harmony and beauty in one's surroundings, art interests. Personal attachment.

1111 = ♂

The individual in action, a positive attitude toward one's family and colleagues. Successful teamwork.

1112 = ♄

The optimist, desire for gaiety and social entertainment within the family circle. Ability to share joy and merriment with others and to make oneself popular with others. Joy and success.

1113 = ♃

The inhibited type, feelings of inferiority, moods of depression. Separation, mourning or bereavement.

1114 = ♂

An excitable person, emotionalism, quick determination. Sudden experiences, excitement or upsets, spoiling of one's plans.

1115 = ♀

Feeling ill at ease in one's circle, emotional suffering, need to hide one's true nature by feigning, simulating or pretending. The misfortune to be surrounded by deceitful or bad people, experiencing disappointments.

1116 = ♀

An unusual person in unusual surroundings, a fascinating personality. The power to exercise a strong influence upon the people in one's environment.

1117 = ♂

An obliging person, seeking contacts with other people. New faces in one's environment.

General Remarks

The observation and research of illness requires a great deal of care and tact. The author has been particularly careful in all of his statements. No-one should be tempted to give a diagnosis on the basis of the cosmic picture alone because it is impossible. So many factors add to the situation which is shown in the chart, but which can only be released under special circumstances. These cannot be foreseen from the chart. One should always consider that Biological Correspondences are based on cooperation with doctors. The Biological Correspondences can become effective through various circumstances. One must always be very careful in interpreting disease.

Those who work on cosmobiology must be constantly aware that it is nonsense to read the destiny from the stars alone. It is also important to have some knowledge of psychology and medicine and a rich experience of life if one wants to help not only one's own family but others too. With every word spoken by the cosmobiological investigator one should be conscious of the responsibility and the damaging consequences which the wrong words could have. One does not help others by making them afraid of the future but must use every opportunity to build up their self-confidence and their self-consciousness of their own value.

Those who advise others should always remember that it is not for them to bring about a decision in the life of another. It is for the cosmobiologist to give help and build up confidence in others so that they can make their own decisions to the best of their ability.

Supplement

Translated by Ilse Hodges
and Charles Harvey

Translator's Notes

Since the appearance of the first English edition in 1960, The Combination of Stellar Influences has universally established itself as a standard work of outstanding importance.

In preparing this translation of the 1961 supplement we have followed Dr. Roosedale's translation of technical terms wherever appropriate, e.g., "Gestim" has been translated as "stellar body" to refer equally to planet, Sun or Moon. Likewise, quotations from the main body of the text have always been given as they appear in the original translation.

As many readers may be as yet unfamiliar with the 90°-circle method of charting described in this supplement, it should be mentioned that this method is usually employed in conjunction with a 90°-dial. This is a simple instrument which enables one to examine all the mid-point axes in a chart in a few minutes. It is an absolutely essential tool for work in this field.

Meanwhile it is hoped that this supplementary material will further stimulate research along the lines pioneered by Mr. Ebertin.

It has always been the intention that the individual statements given in The Combination of Stellar Influences should only be used as suggestions for the interpretation of the combinations and never as though they were immutable and finally established rules. The correspondences of each cosmic factor should be arranged together into a total picture and the meaning of the individual components combined into a coordinated whole. Users repeatedly confirm the often quite disconcerting agreement between some of the interpretations as given and the characteristics and events of an individual's life. But in this very fact there is a danger. A statement must be confirmed not just once but many times and repeatedly if it is to be brought to a level of certainty upon which one can base defensible diagnosis or prognosis. Moreover, one should not neglect to take into account the present conditions of the individual, his or her stage of development, age, environment, walk of life and other factors, and to combine all of these considerations with the findings from the birth chart. The cosmic factor alone is never sufficient, nor ever can be.

Since the 1950 edition numerous advances have been made in cosmobiology which increasingly accentuate the difference between it and the type of "soothsaying" that is so often practiced in the name of astrology. Many particulars have been thoroughly worked out, conclusive statements evolved and work made easier and rationalized with suitable modern methods.

The advantages of the 90-degree-circle have been increasingly recognized so that now no skilled practitioners would consider themselves capable of making a reliable diagnosis or prognosis without it. After World War II, Reinhold Ebertin developed a new method of charting (K2) which combines the 90° and the usual 360° systems on one comprehensive chart form. We may note here in connection with illustrations E/1 and E/2, that the 90° circle is placed round the outside of the usual 360° zodiac. The first 30° contain the cardinal signs: Taurus, Leo, Scorpio, Aquarius; 60°-90° the mutable signs: Gemini, Virgo, Sagittarius, Pisces. This means that when the positions are marked on the 90° circle, conjunction, square and opposition aspects all fall together and the semisquare and sesquiquadrate aspects fall opposite. Thus when several positions fall together one can see at once which factors are in relationship to each other. For example, here in E/2, Jupiter, Neptune, Ascendant and Mars form such a complex. The full advantages of this system only become really apparent when one is working with transits and directions. In this connection attention is drawn to Angewandte Kosmobiologie (Applied Cosmobiology). A further help is Gesicherte Schnelldiagnose (Certain, Quick Diagnosis), which shows the way in which the combinations in a chart will work out.

The cosmic state of a stellar body is determined from a synthesis of its various aspects and mid-point-combinations. It can be very quickly determined with the aid of the 90°-circle. Example E/2 is the chart of the Italian racing cyclist Fausto Coppi. In example E/3, only the cosmic state of Mars has been drawn in. Mars lies in the mid-points Moon/MC and Sun/Pluto. (In precise work with mid-points an orb of only 1½° should be allowed.) It should also be remembered that one speaks of "indirect mid-points" when a factor is not actually on the mid-point axis itself but at a 45° angle to this axis. In this case Mars is almost exactly at the mid-point, or axis, of Sun/Pluto and 45° from the Moon/MC axis.

- Mars = Moon/MC: "The devotion to a task or cause both in body and soul . . . industriousness, the urge to strive constantly for the fulfillment of an objective. . . ."
- Mars = Sun/Pluto: "The desire to perform record achievements . . . over exertion or overtaking ones powers. . . . The tendency to work until physical breakdown occurs."

These statements certainly correspond with the character of a racing cyclist.

The cosmic states such as in example E/3 and in the examples that follow are delineated as part of a "structural-picture" or as "structural-elements." Structural-element is a term synonymous with cosmic state. The structural picture is the "picture" in which all the structural-elements of the chart are contained. The great value of the structural-elements lies in the fact that they are open to comparison in different charts, as will be shown in detail later. However one can only compare charts adequately when they have been erected by a fixed system. Most types of horoscopes in use do not lend themselves to easy comparison as the horizon is usually drawn horizontally across the chart

Ex. E/4 Ex. E/5

Ex. E/6

Ex. E/7

and the MC vertically or obliquely to it. The value of the individual positioning of each picture is well established, but only its zodiacal positioning. As the Sun is at its highest position in Cancer, 0° Cancer is placed at the top of the chart and this marks the zero point of the 90°-circle, as is shown in E/2 and E/3.

When drawing up the structural-picture we further simplify things. The factor under examination (Mars in this case) is set down, a vertical line is drawn under it, and the individual mid-points grouped round it as is shown in E/4. Groupings of other factors are seen round E/3. The strict order of some of the positions has been changed around but it in fact seems to be unimportant whether Mars is in the middle of Moon/MC or MC/Moon. Experience has shown that for the most part the important thing is which factors are combined, while it often seems to be of less importance how these factors are actually grouped. Examples of this are given later.

To illustrate this further the structural-elements (cosmic-states) of Jupiter, Pluto and Moon, examples E/5-E/7, have been added. By comparing the structural-elements of different charts it is possible to replace earlier dogmatic, artificial and inspired "interpretations" with reliable, scientifically established statements.

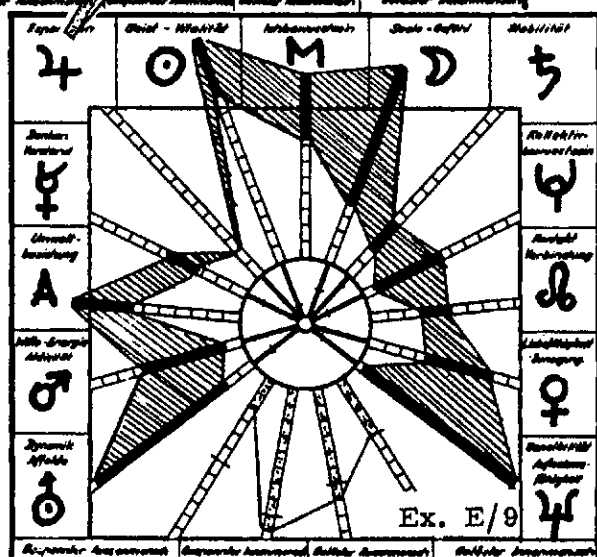

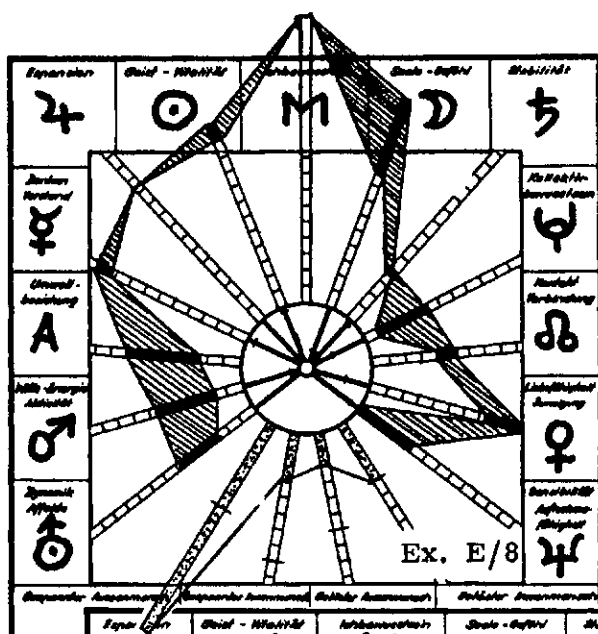

The cosmo-psychogram was developed jointly by Reinhold and Dr. Baldur Ebertin. Its basis is explained in detail and substantiated with numerous illustrations in Die kosmischen Grundlagen unseres Lebens. Its use pre-dates the introduction of structural-elements in chart analysis and in setting up the cosmo-psychogram somewhat larger orbs are used for aspects. Examples E/8 and E/9 show two quite dissimilar cosmo-psychograms. The cosmo-psychogram shows in the form of a seventeen rayed diagram the results obtained by evaluating the structural-elements of a chart according to a fixed key. The bottom four rays show the individual's "type-composition," i.e., the proportion of tension and relaxation, and of inward and outward interest (the tendency to introversion or extroversion). The type-composition is based upon the sign positions of the individual horoscopic factors.

The middle circle of the cosmo-psychogram shows the distance-value of each heavenly body. This is based upon its distance from the Earth, from value 0 for apogee to 100 at perigee.

Each of the 13 birth chart factors is represented by a ray on the cosmo-psychogram. The white inner portion of each ray is its positive value and the black outer portion its negative value. The length of the ray is determined by evaluating the factors mid-points and aspects according to a fixed key. The total white section is defined as the positive "kernel" and the total black section as the negative "mantle." If we compare the two cases E/8 and E/9, it is immediately apparent that in E/8 there is a very large positive kernel and a weak negative mantle, while in E/9 on the other hand there is a smaller positive kernel and a very much larger negative mantle. Furthermore, while E/8 gives an unbroken and coherent impression E/9 appears ragged and disjointed. The actual case histories of these two cases are as follows; E/8 is the psycho-cosmogram of a "happy and successful woman" who has always achieved her aims in life and prospered, while E/9 is the psycho-cosmogram of an extremely sickly individual. He was a forceps delivery and has suffered paralysis since birth and has had to spend his life in a home for the handicapped. Anyone who thoroughly studies cosmo-psychograms will find confirmation of their excellence as tools for the scientific comparison of birth charts.

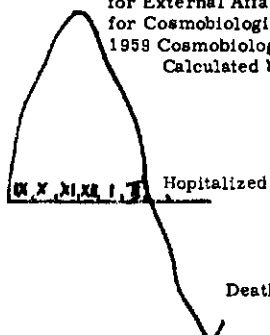

A comparable basis has been developed for use in prognosis: the "years-curve." By evaluating planetary transits according to a fixed key it is possible to represent them in the form of a curve. The curve is drawn about a base line which is divided into months as shown in example E/10. This is part of the years-curve for the late J. F. Dulles. The curve shows a positive high in the autumn of 1958 as Dulles, the then U.S. minister for external affairs, made his successful visit to the Near East. At the beginning of 1959, the curve descends steeply. As the curve crossed the base line in February 1959, Dulles was hospitalized. He died when the curve reached its lowest point in late May. Full instructions and examples can be found in Die Jahreskurve.

The 45°graph-ephemerides are another useful tool. By their use it is possible to survey any particular period in a very short time and to quickly compare the transiting configurations in different charts. Examples E/10 and E/11 show extracts from the graphs of two women who were born on the same day in different years and who suffered still births within two weeks of each other. The natal positions are marked on the right hand side of the graph. From these horizontal lines have been drawn through the graphed positions of the daily transits and transit mid-points. In both cases there is an exact contact between transit Saturn and the natal Sun at the time of the confinement. Of course one should not infer from this that in all cases of pregnant mothers a transit of Saturn over the radical Sun will result in a still birth. But it is a possibility for there is some evidence that still births tend to occur under such configurations. A detailed introduction to the use of these graph-ephemerides can be found in Sternenbahnen-Weltgeschehen-Menschenwege (The Paths of the Planets-World Events-Man's Destiny).

Comparative Research

After this survey of some of the progress that has been made in our subject during the last decade the author would particularly like to introduce the concept of comparative research in order that it may encourage more practical work in this field.

In the case of family research it is exceptionally interesting to compare the structural-elements in the charts of the different members of a family. In example E/13, which is taken from Kosmobiologie, Vol. 25, Feb. 1959, the structural-elements of two children and their parents are set out in a form that has not hitherto been used. By arranging the structural-elements of each chart in rows one under another it is possible to determine similarities and to mark these in more strongly. Although it is generally believed that blood transfusions cannot damage the physical character and mental predispositions of the recipient of the blood, it has however been found at times that damage can be caused. In the case given it was established that the Rhesus factor was of importance. The incompatibility of this factor between mother and child can have serious consequences for the child. After the birth of her first child on February 15, 1939, the mother received daily blood transfusions for a whole week as she had had a severe hemorrhage. When this happens it has been found that it presents a special danger for the second child. Seven years later a second child was born. After birth he became ill with severe jaundice. Eighteen months later the child had to be admitted to hospital following the diagnosis of a deterioration in the red blood corpuscles. One may note in E/13 that the two children share a common structural-element: Sun = Neptune/Pluto and MC/Pluto. In one case the MC is found with Pluto and in the other with Neptune. It may however be accepted that the parents already had a predisposition to this condition. It is known that the father contacted poliomyelitis at the age of four. One observes that the same combinations, but in a different form, occur in the case of the parents. Each of their Neptune structural-elements contains the mid-point Sun/Pluto. Other similarities to be found in this case are: AS = Venus/Mars, AS = Jupiter/Saturn, Mars = Moon/Pluto, Mars = Saturn/AS, Saturn = Moon/Venus, Uranus = Saturn/Pluto, Pluto = Moon/Neptune etc. It is known that cosmic factors are inherited. However, the number of similarities found in this case is not likely to be met with very often.

Common structural elements of a sick family

In the case of illnesses one should always consider the Biological Correspondence sections in this book. It is still too early, however, to be able to give precise methods for medical diagnosis from the chart. In no case should one be tempted to make a diagnosis on the basis of cosmic factors alone. It would be irresponsible for anyone to make a medical diagnosis on this basis without taking a doctor into consultation to corroborate one's findings. Such examinations can only be a means of help to medicine but can never be by itself the basis for a diagnosis.

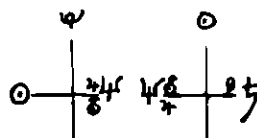

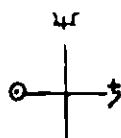

A further case of blood disease is found in examples E/14 and E/15, from Kosmobiologie, Vol. 28, April 1961. The child was confirmed to have a progressive deterioration of the blood in its seventh year. Here again mother and child have a similar combination involving Neptune-Pluto-Sun, while they also reveal a second common structural-elements involving variations on Sun-Neptune-Saturn.

In the five cases of poliomyelitis given, the first five cases from our polio research file, we may observe once again that each example contains the combination Sun-Neptune-Pluto in some form or another. We may remember that the same structural-elements were found in the case of the father in E/13 who had had polio. We cannot of course say yet that in cases of blood disease and poliomyelitis that this stellar combination will always be present, especially as the contraction of polio has not really been explained yet. We do not yet know in what way the bacillus is passed on, but it is quite definite that the nature and composition of the blood is of importance. This has been shown by the cases of healing where polio has been cured through the stimulation of the blood circulation brought about by hydropathic treatment. Through the mutual cooperation of cosmobiologists it may be possible to institute cosmobiology as a tool for the diagnosis of disease. If this is to be accomplished it is necessarily of the first importance to work in conjunction with the medical profession.

Next to health the question of success in life is considered by most people to be of particular importance. The question is constantly asked in vocational guidance as to whether the chart already contains the particular predispositions necessary for especial success. In the following examples it will become evident that successful individuals and those responsible for great undertakings do have similar structural-elements in their charts. The great industrialist Dr. Friedrich Flick is the son of a farmer and mines timber merchant. He obtained a diploma in retail trading, by the age of twenty-four was already a confidential clerk, and by thirty was head of a steel company. Today he is one of the richest industrialists, holding shares in numerous companies, such as Daimler-Benz, Monopol-Bergbau and Auto-Union. Bertgikd Beitz is the son of a bank official. He had to earn his school fees by giving private tuition. He went on to study banking and by twenty-four was head of a bank. He was exempted from military service and put in charge of the exploitation of the Polish oil fields. Later he met Alfried Krupp and is today the head of Krupps. Herbert Eklöh comes from a family of grocers. He himself managed a small shop until he had saved enough money to travel to the U.S. From there he returned with many new ideas and acted as an adviser to a group of chain stores. He then started his first self-service shops and was unusually successful. In all of these successful men we find Sun/Jupiter = Mars, which is the ability to succeed. In the case of Flick, this combination is made particularly important by the addition of Pluto, while his success in cooperation with others by Moon's Node = Sun/Mars and Sun/Pluto. In the case of Beitz, Mars is in the mid-points both of Sun/Jupiter and Jupiter/Pluto. In the case of Eklöh, he also has Jupiter = Sun/Pluto, another combination for success. Naturally many other combinations are of importance in these charts but they cannot all be mentioned here.

First World War. Today he owns the largest photographic concern in the world. Gottlieb Duttweiler is a well-known Swiss businessman who caused a great stir at one time by selling cut-price food from a van and then later from his Migros-shops. In both of these cases the natal charts show Moon = Jupiter/Pluto. This position is interpreted as "the ability to influence the masses or the public through an appeal to the feelings." This is especially appropriate in the case of Duttweiler, for whom social reforms are a particular concern. Of course in these cases, as always, one must consider the natal chart as a whole if one is to obtain an impression of the total person.

In the charts of doctors the combination Jupiter = Sun/Mercury or variations of this combination have been found to a strikingly marked extent. This combination might be given as "a good doctor," but it will not of course be found in every doctor's chart. Felix Schottlaender, E/22, is a well known psychiatrist and therapist. Richard Croon, E/23, rose from being a simple GP to become a diagnostician of international standing who, in collaboration with others, developed a system of Electro-Neural-Diagnosis and a form of therapy which is applied at a well-known health resort. A. J. Cronin, E/24, was a doctor who became well known through his novels in which he described and exposed the appalling hygienic and social conditions in the English mining towns. It is significant in his case that as well as having the structural-elements for a "good doctor" that he also has Mercury = Jupiter/Pluto, which worked out in his case not so much through persuasive oratory as through his novels.

The "atom-formula," which is to be found in the case of many atomic physicists and rocket specialists, was found entirely through comparison. It was even found that this combination Sun-Mars-Pluto and its variations was present at the launching of satellites, of the first Moon rocket and of the first manned space flights. A few well-known personalities in whose natal charts this atom-formula is found are Robert Oppenheimer, who was in charge of atomic research in the U.S. during World War II, and Wernher von Braun, who is already well-known for his work on the construction of the V2 and is now the rocket specialist in charge of the U.S. Space Program. J.P. Hagen, E/28, is head of the earth satellite program in the U.S.

In the case of inventors and engineers one might expect Uranus and Mercury to be in certain mid-points as the combination of Mercury and Uranus is given as corresponding with mathematicians, technicians, physicists, cosmobiologists and those professionally engaged in the study and application of rhythmic. Jupiter in connection with Mercury and Uranus seems to promise success in technical and mathematical work. This appears in various permutations and sometimes one factor is changed for another. It seems of significance that there is a similarity of two of the structural-elements in the charts of the aeronautical engineers Igor Sigorsky and Andrej Tupolew. Sigorsky invented the first helicopter as a model when he was still a child. He built the first four-engine airplane in the world and later on became known as "the master of the impossible."

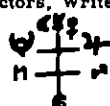

Tupolew began his career by building gliders. In the last few years he has caused a considerable stir with his 200-seat TU114, which has four turbo-prop engines and a range of 5,000 miles. In the case of the inventor of the atomic submarine, Hyman G. Rickover, the Mercury-Uranus axis lies in the success mid-point Jupiter/Pluto. Auguste Piccard, who made the first stratosphere flight to a height of over 10 miles and who descended nearly two miles in his deep-sea bathyscaphe, has Mars and Uranus in the midpoint Jupiter/Pluto. Felix Wankel, inventor of the Wankel-engine, has the same factors in combination but differently arranged. Hall and Heroult both discovered aluminum. They were born in the same year and made their discoveries in the same year but completely independently. Both cases contain similar structural-elements, of which Neptune = Mars/Jupiter is of special interest as the discovery of Neptune heralded the period in which chemistry came to the forefront and has been considered as the planet associated with chemistry. But while this combination has been found in the case of other individual chemists it would be unwise to conclude without further research that we have here a "chemist formula" (E/34 and E/35).

In the case of artistically creative people, combinations of various kinds with Pluto predominate. One may perhaps assume in the case of Pluto combinations that there will be some sort of deviation from the norm, both in the positive and the negative senses. Among the charts of actors there are some factors which recur with remarkable frequency. In the cases of Gerard Philipe and Yul Brynner, E/36 and E/37, Mercury, Uranus and the Moon are all found in the Jupiter/Pluto axis, which will be found to particularly relate to creativity, oratorical ability and the capacity to make the most of opportunities available. Gina Lollobrigida has Sun and Venus in the mid-point Jupiter/Pluto, while Nadja Tiller has Pluto = Sun/Jupiter, which is of course only another grouping of the same principles. Among well-known contemporary writers the mid-point Mercury/Pluto often occurs in different combinations. This combination is given as success in speaking and writing. In the case of the two journalists, Thorwald and Kirst, who are particularly well-known through their magazine stories, we find Pluto = Mercury/Uranus as a common element. This would seem to have especial reference to the actual technique of writing. The charts of Kästner and Remarque show broad similarities. At the same time, however, in research of this kind one should not expect to find many similarities as each writer is a different character with different interests.

In the case of musicians, E/44-E/47, Venus as the creative element and Uranus as the symbol of rhythm are found in the success axis Jupiter/Pluto. There are many similarities in the structural-elements of Pergo-Lesi the 18th century "miracle child" and of Toscanini, the "magician of the conductor's baton." Karajan has the same elements as Toscanini, but in a different grouping. The cellist Hoelscher has Jupiter in the Venus/Uranus axis instead of Pluto. Of this combination Ebertin says, "love of art, sense of rhythm and artistic wing-like inspiration."

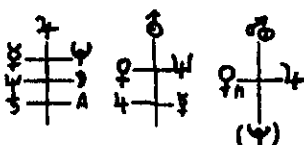

In the case of criminals there are many similarities in the elements in a different way. A comparison of the charts of the two confidence tricksters, E/48 and E/49, shows a striking similarity in three of their structural-elements. The first, Dr. R. S., posed as an army psychologist and examined army officers without any qualifications to do so. The second, K. H. B., was a "marriage-swindler" who managed to gain entry into the highest social circles. In the cases of the sexual offenders Seefeld and Mrazek, the structural-elements clearly indicate a predisposition to this type of behavior: an unhealthy sex drive and a repressed passion which could become violent when the occasion arose. In both cases Mars is found in the mid-point Venus/Saturn, while Saturn is in one case in the mid-point Moon/Venus and in the other in Venus/Mars. See examples E/50 and E/51.

The final examples, E/52-E/54, do not contain any common elements, but the correspondences between the structural-elements and the circumstances should be noted. In the case of SS H. Himmler, the planetary patterning shows him to have been a weak and inhibited man, who for this very reason wanted to make himself important by trying to play the role of "Lord over life and death" until he was forced to destroy himself. Dr. Oskar Dirlewanger, the leader of the "Bewährungseinheit" of the SS, which consisted chiefly of criminal elements, was a man who planned (Mercury) violence (Pluto = Mars/Uranus) and who was personally responsible for doing away with 92 of the 15,000 partisans killed in the east. The one-time president of the people's court of justice, Dr. Roland Freisler, was originally a communist and a commissar in a Russian prisoner-of-war camp before he acquired the reputation as a fanatical and ruthless judge who handed down innumerable death sentences. One could interpret the planetary picture given in E/54 as success (Jupiter/Pluto) through mass (Moon's Node) murder (Mars/Saturn).

The advantages of this method of presentation in terms of structural-elements and structural-pictures will be obvious. Looking for similarities in charts erected in the usual manner is extremely tedious. It is assumed, however, that in converting the chart into its 90° form that the 90°-disc is used which enables one to also see the 360° chart. The interrelationships of the 360° should not be neglected, whilst an even better overall assessment of the chart can be obtained from the use of the cosmo-psychogram. However, these work methods will only yield their real value when all those interested are working together and can assemble really substantial quantities of material. This book is only a very modest beginning.
